One Idea That Changed My Talks Forever

Whether you’re a guy or a girl, one thing is clear to you, you love your partner and you want to make this relationship work.

I understand.

But of course, the problem that you’re facing right now doesn’t give you peace of mind, it stresses you out, makes you doubt the relationship and worry that your partner might give up on you.

So what’s the problem? Well, your conversations tend to get more and more boring and monotone. They’re not like they used to be. They feel like hard work and you don’t know what to do about it.

You’ve probably tried making them more fun, you’ve tried being more interesting, you’ve maybe even tried talking to your partner about it, but things don’t seem to change.

One thing is clear, your conversations are not like they used to be, and that is killing you inside with worries and never-ending daily stress.

I know how you feel.
Because the truth is, I've been where you are. I had my own share of monotone conversations, filled with awkward silences and same old chitchat that made things even more boring.

I remember this one time when my girlfriend first told me that our conversations are getting so dull and predictable and that we should do something about it. It was that moment when I felt like the ceiling was about to fall all over my head, I was caught off guard and felt like that was it – I was going to lose her.

Next time we talked, the moment I ran out of things to say, I had to find an excuse to leave the conversation, and go to the kitchen to quickly think of something that would move the conversation forward.

I felt under a lot of stress when we talked and full of worries in between our talks, and this lasted for weeks.

Until one day something happened.

That day I had a huge realization, and that was that our daily talks were not meant to be always super fun and interesting, they were just meant to keep us connected and allow us to spend some quality together.

I realized that we both put to much attention on the content of the conversation, when actually it was the connection that mattered the most.

And that’s when our talks took a 180 degree turn, and incredibly enough became a lot more fun and exciting for both of us. That’s when we started to care less what we were talking about, as long as we were talking.

Which removed all those logical filters of “is this interesting enough”, “should I say this or not”, “what will he/she think of me if I say this”?
It removed all those worries that we had before when we were concentrating on the content rather than on the connection.

If you were to listen to one of our conversations after we had this amazing realization, you’d say “What the heck is going on? These guys don’t make any sense, but sure enough the conversation is all fun and smooth and they can’t get enough of each other!”

This, my friend, is where I want you to be.

I want you to stop worrying about the content of the conversation and start celebrating the connection that each conversation allows you both to feel.

The truth is that you’re just spending time together because you love each other’s presence, and what you talk about is not that important, as long as you guys talk and meet each other’s need for connection and affection.

To go even further, it’s not the content of the conversation that matters, but the emotions that you and your partner feel during the conversation. And in order for you guys to feel that wide range of emotions while you talk to each other, you’ve gotta stop worrying so much about what you talk about and just go with the flow.

Talk about whatever comes to mind, give yourself permission to be playful and crazy and stop filtering too much the thoughts and ideas that come to your mind.

You see, your mind never stops thinking, you’ve never actually gone blank, and even when you apparently go blank, your mind is thinking to itself “I just went blank”. So you never run out of thoughts. The problem is that you filter those thoughts too much. And what you’re left with are a few things to say that are often dry and boring.

But here’s the thing my friend... And again this advice is for both guys and girls. As long as you’re a human being and have a long distance relationship this applies to you...
It’s the state of mind that you’re in that will determine what type of thoughts are going through your head.

And while it’s best if you are more often in a playful state of mind, it’s totally fine to be sad, bored, tired or stressed sometimes. As long as you’re aware of the state that you’re in, and you gently warn your partner about it so that she/he understands where you’re at, and doesn’t take your mood personally.

Now in our case, after our big-time realization that our talks were more about us enjoying each others presence, rather than coming up with super interesting topics to discuss, what happened was that surprisingly enough we actually started coming up naturally and effortlessly with fun and exciting topics to talk about.

And we were having the best conversations ever.

I was living with a few roommates in a shared apartment and after my 2-3 hour-long Skype talks my friends were always asking me “What on earth do you guys talk about for so long? And how can you laugh and still have fun together everyday like that?”

It was hard for them to understand, but it was easy for us.

So this being said, my friend, whether you’re a guy or a girl reading this book, I want to help you have the type of conversations that you are both going to enjoy. I want to help you get rid of all the stress of making a conversation fun, and actually having a fun conversation naturally and effortlessly.

That’s why this book is all about showing you how you can become an amazing conversationalist with your partner and therefore enjoy a happy, strong and exciting long distance relationship.

Because at the end of the day we are not born conversationalists and never had to keep 1-2 hour long (or more) daily conversations with someone, and on top of that, make them fun and interesting.
It’s quite a challenge; it’s quite a skill to be developed. But it’s easier than you think. And that’s what I’m about to teach you in this book.

Well then, let’s get to work...

So this book is about two things and two things only: beliefs and ideas.

The 12 beliefs are about teaching you the right way to think about your conversations in a long distance relationship.

You’ve already learned one of the key beliefs, which is the distinction between focusing on connection rather than on content. This one distinction alone can make a huge difference in your communication from now on.

But there are a few more vital distinctions that you need to learn that will help you and your partner look at your conversations the right way.

Once you learn these simple beliefs or distinctions, you’ll never look at your talks the same way again, you’ll never struggle to make a conversation fun and you’ll never run out of things to say... especially after you go through the second part of the book, as well.

And that’s because the second part of the book consists of the incredible collection of 50 ideas or techniques that you can use straight away to make your talks super fun and exciting.

This is my conversation goldmine. These are all the creative ideas that me and my girlfriend have developed and used for the past 8 years to make our conversations smooth and exciting.
And each idea is a simple, yet creative and practical way to make sure that you’re having the most fun, touching and interesting conversations that you’ll both enjoy, and that will get you closer and closer every time you talk.

Once you learn the right beliefs, and you discover the 50+ ideas, running out of things to say will be a thing of the past. Having boring conversations will be a thing of the past. Worrying about the relationship will be a thing of the past.

And you’ll be left to celebrate the present moment where you and your partner just can’t get enough of each other every time you talk.

But that’s not all!

Because I’ve also revealed for the first time my magical formula for endless conversations in this book. The conversation formula that I’ve been using for years now to make my talks fun and effortless.

And once you know this simple formula, talks become easy because every conversation follows this formula, and it helps you know where you are in the conversation and what you can talk about.
